

Stem Cell Research Survey— 2005

Students from City Charter High School are trying to collect information on the public's feelings about Stem Cell Research. Please read each statement carefully and put a checkmark in the box that best indicates your feelings about the statement.

Stem Cells are found in both humans and animals. Human Stem Cells can be taken from embryos, umbilical cords, bone marrow, and other places in the body. Stem Cells taken from embryos are believed to have the ability to turn into any cell in the body. Stem Cells taken from other parts of the body are believed to not have that flexibility. Current laws of the United States do not allow Stem Cell research on aborted fetuses or embryos, though scientists are allowed to use adult Stem Cells and fetuses/embryos from before the ban was created in 2001.
